

People's History Museum gallery interventions: banner commission

Appendix

People's History Museum has over 450 historic and contemporary banners; including the largest and most important collection of trade union and political banners in the world, and the world's oldest trade union banner the Tin Plate Workers Society banner.

Here are some examples of the historic style that still influences banner design today.

Tin Plate Workers Society banner, 1821, on display in Main Gallery One at People's History Museum. Image courtesy of People's History Museum

Banners on display in Main Gallery Two at People's History Museum. Image courtesy of People's History Museum

Operative Bricklayers Society emblem, 1869, on display in Main Gallery One at People's History Museum. Image courtesy of People's History Museum

Dockers Union Export Branch banner (front side), 1890s. Image courtesy of People's History Museum.

Dockers Union Export Branch banner (reverse side), 1890s. Image courtesy of People's History Museum

Ipswich Dockers Union banner (front side), 1890s. Image courtesy of People's History Museum

Ipswich Dockers Union banner (reverse side), 1890s. Image courtesy of People's History Museum

The National Builders', Labourers and Constructional Workers' Society banner (front side), 1921. Image courtesy of People's History Museum

The National Builders', Labourers and Constructional Workers' Society banner (reverse side), 1921. Image courtesy of People's History Museum

Amalgamated Stevedores' Labour Protection League, Executive Council banner, 1918 Image courtesy of People's History Museum